THE LSEC CORNER

Exposing the Dangers of Internet Chat Rooms

Teenagers who use the various online services often feel that they don't need the same controls or restrictions as younger children. Unfortunately, teens are more likely to get in trouble while online than are younger children. Online chat rooms afford teenagers the opportunity to easily reach out beyond their parents, their circle of friends, or even their own general peer group. Teens are frequently unaware that chat rooms are often the most dangerous online location a person can visit. A chat room provides a teenager an opportunity to engage in a "live" conversation with friends from school or church, or with other teenagers from around the world. A chat room is described as being similar to an old style telephone party line except that the teens are typing or, if the computer's microphone is enabled, they may be talking with each other in real time (with no delay).

Law enforcement has found that child molesters use chat rooms to gain easy and safe access to teens. Unfortunately, child molesters will gravitate to a chat room and then sexually exploit children. In many situations a child molester will assume the identity of a younger man. During a chat or during the course of several chats, he will appear to act very concerned and understanding, and in some cases will offer the child compassionate advice. Because of the caring and the seductive talent of child molester, teenagers should be warned that when they are in a chat room, they should NEVER provide anyone with private information, personal information, and especially their specific physical location. Chat rooms can be a source of amusement, but chat rooms can also be very risky. Prior to a teen or a child joining in the fun of online chatting, a frank discussion should occur where the dangers of online chatting are discussed, and specific rules are established to help protect the child from online predators.
